

Farewell to the crew of the R-34 when she left for America. The giant airship was back in England before this picture, which was brought here on one of the fastest steamships, reached its destination. This goes to show the advantages of aerial travel.

Copyright, Underwood & Underwood.

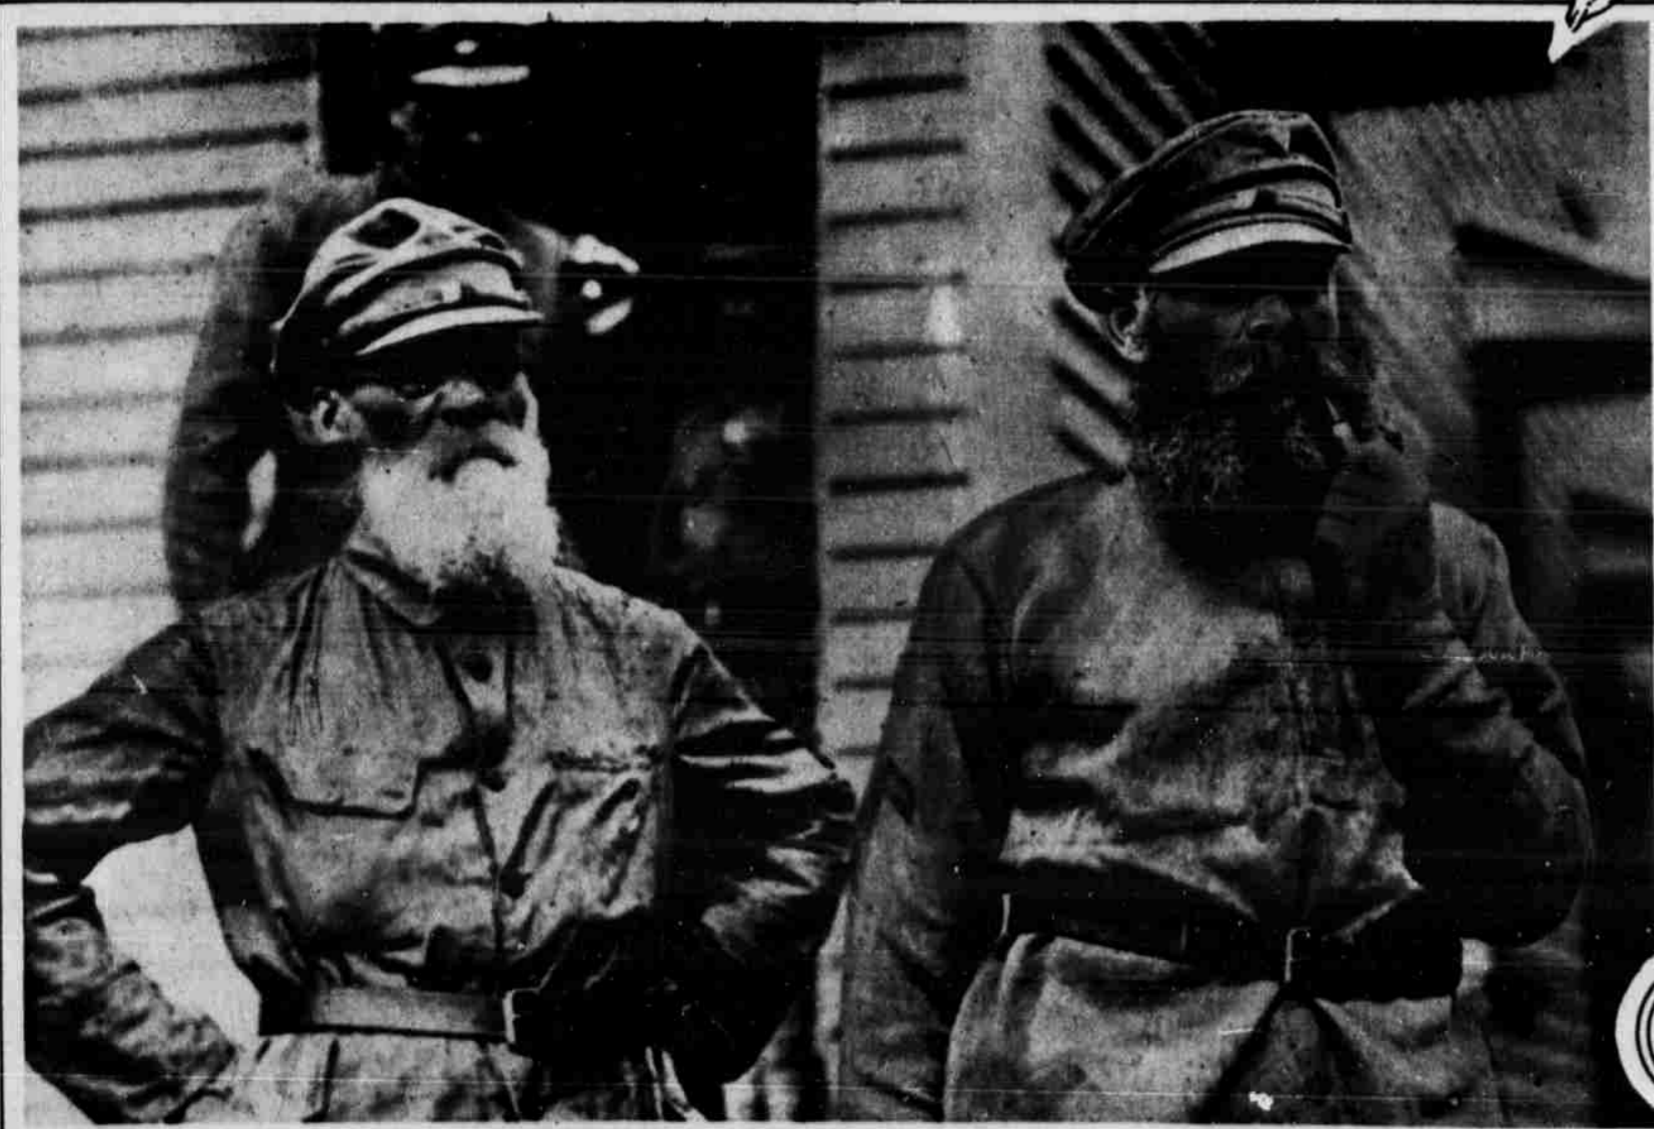

American relief work in Vienna has saved the lives of hundreds of children. President Seitz (in derby) of the Austrian Republic is shown inspecting one of the out of door restaurants run for the youngsters.

Photo by Paul Thompson.

In "This Man's Army" rank is preserved where necessary, yet there is a spirit of cooperation that has made the outfit invincible. Here's Lieut.-Gen. Hunter Liggett standing on the deck of the Aquitania, surrounded by a group of doughboys. Gen. Liggett commanded the First Field Army. He knows who won the war. Photo by International Film.

If it is true that this was a "young man's war," these two individuals don't belong. Yet there is the best of testimony that they are real veterans, having fought through the Siberian campaigns with the Czecho-Slovak forces. Both are over 70 years old and they are on their way home, passing through this country en route.

Photo by International Film.

At the Islip, L. I., horse show, which was a success despite the fact that it was held on a rainy Saturday. Above is Mrs. F. Skiddy von Stade, one of the most interested of the spectators, and below is John Jacob Astor and his step-father, William K. Dick, who was an exhibitor.

Photos by International Film.

